UNREINFORCED MASONRY DATABASE

The following database contains some information about buildings in the City of Portland which are believed to be of unreinforced masonry construction.

The City of Portland makes no representations, express or implied, as to the accuracy of this database. For the following reasons, there are no assurances as to whether the information contained in this database is correct or comprehensive.

This data was accumulated over a number of summers in the early 1990's by work-study students based on their observation of the exteriors of the buildings as well as research of city records. The data has not been comprehensively updated since it was accumulated. Some of the buildings may no longer exist. Buildings may have more than one address or have an address different than the one in the database. Some of the buildings may not be of unreinforced masonry construction. Some of the buildings in the database have been improved to better resist seismic loads. The presence of a building in this data is not a predictor of its performance in an earthquake. Many factors determine the damage to a building in a seismic event. Some, but not all, of these factors include: the size and location of the event; local soils which are under the building; the building configuration; the design of the building; the quality of construction; how well the building has been maintained; the size of the building; the age of the building; and whether or not the building has been structurally modified and if so, how it was changed. The services of a registered professional engineer are needed to accurately determine the capacity of a building to resist seismic loads.

Again, the City of Portland makes no representations that the information is currently accurate, or was accurate at the time of the compilation of the database. Any publication or distribution that is made of this information, or any conclusions drawn from this information, should be made with these limitations in mind. Any publication or distribution of this information would be solely at your own risk.
