Inner Southeast Station Area Planning

Help plan the future of the new light rail station areas at OMSI, Clinton, Rhine and Holgate

CENTRAL CITY 2035 SE QUADRANT

The new Portland-Milwaukie light rail line is under construction and will open in 2015. It's time to update the long-term vision for our new inner Southeast Portland station areas.

Join the City of Portland at a series of meetings and events held this summer to explore the future character of four MAX station areas: OMSI, Clinton, Rhine and Holgate. All interested community members and stakeholders are invited to participate.

Save these dates in Summer 2013

Share your views about the Inner Southeast Station Areas

Help answer guiding questions about the station areas in SE Portland, such as:

- How can investment and transit ridership be encouraged, while supporting the existing industrial and employment character of Inner SE Portland?
- How can light rail support and enhance nearby residential neighborhoods?
- What transportation investments are needed to support access to the stations?

How your input will be used

During the summer of 2013, the Inner SE Station Area Planning effort will begin updating the vision and long-range plan for the areas around the four new close-in SE Portland light rail stations. During this first phase of the project, community input will be used to develop initial land use and development concept alternatives to be examined in greater detail. During Phase II, which will begin in the fall of 2013, ideas for the OMSI and Clinton stations will be examined as part of the broader SE Quadrant Plan effort for the Central Eastside area of the Central City. Ideas for the Rhine and Holgate stations will feed into a Brooklyn Station Areas Plan.
