Dear Reader:

This year brought many changes to the Portland Police Bureau, including a change in the Chief's Office. Joining the Portland Police Bureau in late 1999, I was unfortunately not present for many of the accomplishments listed in this report, but am happy to address them, as well as the Bureau's preparations to enter a new millennium.

In 1999, the Portland Police Bureau completed its tenth year of community policing and its second year of the 1998-2000 Strategic Plan. This plan, which outlines the mission, objectives and the five-year goals of the Bureau, provides a blueprint for community policing.

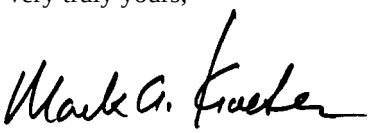
Statistics for reported Part I crimes in Portland show a reduction in total Part I crimes by 10 percent. Total property crimes were down 11 percent.

For the first time in 25 years, the Police Bureau trained its own officers, rather than send them to the state training facility in Monmouth. The new academy began in February 1999 as part of Operation 80. The Police Bureau transferred personnel and formulated its own 19-week training academy for new officers, graduating 66 officers in July 1999.

The Institute for Law and Justice (ILJ) project also enhanced the Portland Police Bureau's strategic planning process in 1999. This report, Future Plan: Taking Community Policing to the Next Level, as well as the Steering Committee's report on the project, was invaluable in helping to illustrate needed strategies that the Bureau should review for the future.

Additional accomplishments are outlined in this report.

Very truly yours,



Mark A. Kroeker
Chief of Police

Portland Police Bureau 1998 Accomplishments

Strategic Assessment
In June 1998, the City Council approved the Police Bureau's 1998-2000 Strategic Plan. This plan, updated every two years, sets for the Bureau's five-year goals and objectives, and defines its mission:

> The mission of the Portland Police Bureau is to maintain and improve community livability by working with all citizens to preserve life, maintain human rights, protect property and promote individual responsibility and community commitment.

All Police Bureau objectives and strategies are developed under the following four goals:

- Reduce crime and fear of crime
- Empower the community
- Develop and empower personnel
- Strengthen planning, evaluation and fiscal support

Reduce Crime and Fear of Crime

Bureau Uses ATVs to Patrol
Portland Police Bureau officers began patrolling areas in Portland in all terrain vehicles (ATVs). The Bureau has 12 ATVs for use by officers. Officers use the ATVs to patrol the waterfront, Springwater Corridor, Powell Butte Park, areas along I-205, as well as many other spots around Portland.

The ATVs are an efficient way for officers to patrol and can access a lot of areas that are prohibitive by car. Other uses for the ATVs have included the Forest Park homicide investigation and helping to clean up illegal campsites.

Crime Rate Reduction
Statistics for reported Part I crimes in Portland show a reduction in total Part I crimes by 10 percent. Total property crimes were down 11 percent.

Criminalist Awarded Grant
Sgt. Criminalist Mary Brandon, Identification Division, was awarded an almost $8,000 research grant from the International Association for Identification to conduct research on identical twins' fingerprints.

The project, Twinprint, is intended to validate the basic tenet of fingerprint science: that no two people, not even identical twins, have the same fingerprints. Recently, a federal court case challenged, though unsuccessfully, fingerprint identification as a science. As a result, fingerprint professionals realized the need for scientific studies of fingerprints. Although there have been many studies done of identical twins' fingerprints, there have been no definitive comprehensive studies since the advent of DNA.

Criminalist Wins Award
Sgt. Criminalist James Ziegler won a first place award at the International Association for Identification, Pacific NW Division, spring conference for his poster presentation on a unique robbery case solved by fingerprints.

Ziegler's case, entitled, "Fingerprints and the Halloween Bandit" told of a computer store bandit who wore a full costume down to theatrical latex poured on his hands, covering his fingers. Holding the employees at gunpoint and tying them up in a back room, the robber then removed the cumbersome theatrical latex fingers, put on gloves, and hauled away the goods. One of the latex fingers was left behind.

Sgt. Ziegler found a fingerprint inside the latex finger, entered it in AFIS, and got a "hit." The suspect was subsequently arrested and convicted.

Domestic Violence Reporting Enhanced
In early 1999, the Portland Police Bureau changed its way of reporting domestic violence cases.

The Bureau instituted the use of a supplemental family abuse police report form that officers fill out on a mandatory basis when a crime of domestic violence, child abuse or elderly abuse has occurred and an Incident Report is written. This additional information assists the Family Services Division to assign resources to stop violence before it begins and aid in the protection and prosecution of suspects.

In addition, it is also advantageous for officers to be able to check the computer and know when they are being dispatched to a residence that has had a history of domestic problems. Domestic violence cases are dangerous to police, as they are often very violent, emotionally charged and extremely volatile.

Drug Free Zones Expanded
A new drug free zone, the Woodlawn Zone, was added in 1999. The Beach Street zone was expanded to include more residential neighborhoods.

The zones prohibit people who have been arrested or convicted of drug crimes from entering the designated area for a specified amount of time. Officer-issued exclusions are effective for 90 days. Court-issued exclusions for both conviction of drug crimes or drug program diversion are effective for a period of one year.

In addition to the North/Northeast zones, the city's other zones include the inner Eastside and the Westside section of the city that encompasses most of downtown, Old Town and Chinatown.

DUII Enhanced Vehicle Forfeiture Ordinance
The Police Bureau's Drugs and Vice Division and the City Attorney's Office asked for and received an ordinance from City Council allowing immediate impounding of a vehicle driven by an intoxicated driver. The Bureau will be allowed to hold vehicles for a reasonable period of time (three to five days), giving the Bureau time to investigate if the driver meets the prior conviction criteria for driving while intoxicated in the last three years in any state.

Portland police expect, based on past years, to impound 2,600 vehicles next year from drunken drivers. Most will be returned; only approximately 300 to 400 will probably meet criteria for forfeiture.

The ordinance also allows for impounding and possible forfeiture in cases where the driver's license has been criminally suspended or revoked or where the driver was eluding or fleeing police.

Escort Ordinance
The Police Bureau worked to develop an ordinance requiring escort and private modeling business owners and employees to have work permits, employee identification cards and detailed record-keeping of transactions. The new ordinance, adopted by City Council this year, also keeps anyone younger than 18 from working in the industry.

The Drugs and Vice Division wanted the ordinance to allow them to track the increased businesses, which are often organized criminal enterprises. In the past five years, Portland has had an increased amount of escort and lingerie-modeling businesses, which are hard to track due to their use of cell phones and pagers. The new ordinance requires escort/modeling businesses to keep a place of business and maintain records like any other business.

Family Services Division
The Police Bureau reorganized the Family Services Division in spring 1999. The new division includes the Child Abuse Team (CAT), Domestic Violence Reduction Unit (DVRU) and the Runaway Juvenile Program. Prior to the reorganization, the units were acting independently, and were housed in the Detective Division. The reorganization allows for the units to be located together with service providers from other agencies, and promotes a multi-disciplinary approach to domestic violence problems.

Family Services Grant
The Family Services Division received a grant from the Office of Justice Programs. The grant for just over $750,000 will be used to implement the Domestic Violence Intervention Team Project. The multi-disciplinary approach will be a follow-up to incidents where a uniformed officer responds to a dispatched call related to domestic violence, but no crime is reported.

The responding teams will consist of a uniformed sergeant and a victim advocate from a community-based organization. Though the teams will be under the command of Family Services, they will spend the majority of their time in precincts: contacting complainants, interacting with officers and attending roll calls.

The Domestic Violence Intervention Teams will be assigned to cases where there are indications that there are significant issues and potential for violence within the family. This type of contact will provide an opportunity for early intervention that includes system-wide support for the complainant as well as referral for services. The project will be initiated in two of the five precincts within Portland for a period of 18 months.

Family Violence Forum
The Family Services Division and the Tactical Operations Division hosted a live, nationwide televised educational forum which focused on family violence. The forum, which was in November 1999, included an interactive discussion between panel members, a studio and statewide audience.

The purpose of the forum was to present a multi-disciplinary approach to stopping the cycle of family violence by educating law enforcement and working with social service and health care providers, including the faith community, businesses, service providers and educators. Participants included representatives from public safety, social services and both the political and public communities.

Forest Park Task Force
In mid-June, the Police Bureau organized a task force to investigate the three homicides in which the victims were discovered in Forest Park.

In order to mobilize this operation, the Police Bureau had to temporarily reassign many people in the Bureau. Due to hard work, creativity and a good investigative strategy, the investigation was brought to a close after a short amount of time, and a suspect was apprehended.

Internet Mapping
The Police Bureau received a grant and began working on a project, which would provide Internet crime mapping ability to the community. The project will allow Internet users to create neighborhood maps that illustrate various crimes that have occurred in their neighborhood.

In addition to educating the public and our public safety partners, the project will also be valuable to Bureau members by giving them the capability to perform crime mapping on any computer that has Internet access.

Methamphetamine Grant
In September, the Police Bureau received a grant for $300,000 from the U.S. Department of Justice to fight the resurgent methamphetamine trade. The grant will fund a full-time civilian analyst to track connections between meth manufacturers, develop prevention programs for children, and train firefighters, building inspectors and police to recognize the signs of meth labs.

Portland was one of nine communities nationwide, and the only one in the Northwest, to receive money from a $2.6 million fund from the Office of Community Oriented Policing Services.

Operation 80
The Police Bureau conducted Operation 80, an aggressive effort to hire 80 officers between fall 1998 and February 1999. The effort resulted in hiring 74 officers. Operation 80 had three components: recruiting, hiring (goal of 80 officers) and training. The Police Bureau transferred personnel and formulated its own 19-week training academy for new officers, and graduated 66 officers in July 1999. For the first time in 25 years, the Police Bureau trained its own officers, rather than sending them to the state training facility in Monmouth. The new academy began in February 1999, and provides a short-term opportunity to train more police officers than the state facility could accept.

The Bureau did not receive any additional funding for the project, and relied on existing personnel to run the academy. The Bureau worked closely with the state facility to comply with all state regulations regarding training and curriculum.

Polaroid Cameras
Tool to Combat Domestic Violence
Through a grant, the Police Bureau bought 650 new cameras to document domestic violence victims' cuts, bruises, swelling and bleeding when officers are called to the scene. The instant photos will help prosecutors proceed with a case, even if a victim chooses later to drop the charges.

The cameras were bought through Polaroid Corp. with a special offer to law enforcement. The cameras were discounted, and a $120,000 federal grant covered the cost of the cameras, film and four-hour photography training sessions for all patrol officers, sergeants and most investigators. Prior to this, only police precinct sergeants were assigned cameras, and often were unable to respond to a crime scene to assist an officer with photos because of other duties.

Red Light Cameras
The Police Bureau assisted in successfully lobbying the Oregon legislature to allow Portland to use red light cameras. The legislation allows the installation of traffic cameras that automatically photograph drivers who run red lights at dangerous intersections. People who run red lights, according to figures from the city's Transportation Bureau cause about 1,200 crashes a year in Portland. Each year, about four people die and 600 are injured in such accidents.

Safety Zone: Cops Talk
The Police Bureau concluded its demonstration program, Safety Zone: Cops Talk in spring 1999, and made the decision to continue to the program on its own. The program, which was funded by a grant through the U.S. Department of Justice, is for adults with developmental disabilities and their direct care workers. The program is designed to teach crime prevention and personal safety strategies and assist officers in working with people who have developmental disabilities. The program, which is taught by a uniformed officer and a non-sworn member, is now being nationally distributed to other law enforcement agencies. The comprehensive curriculum includes 27 lessons on personal safety and crime prevention.

Safety Zone: Cops Talk is a cooperative effort between the Portland Police Bureau, The Arc of Multnomah County, Multnomah County Division of Developmental Disabilities, Multnomah County District Attorney's Office, Rainbow Adult Living, Independent Living Resources, United Cerebral Palsy Association of Oregon and Southwest Washington and community partnerships.

School Police Management
The Portland Police Bureau took command of the 20-member school police force in spring 1998. Under the new plan, school police officers remain employees of the school district, but a Portland Police Bureau captain supervises the unit.

The new restructuring allows for the Bureau to work more closely with the school police to reduce gang activity and to better implement the Bureau's programs that educate kids.

Youth Gun Anti-Violence Task Force (YGAT)
A year after the creation of the Youth Gun Anti-Violence Task Force (YGAT) in June 1998, a progress report was released showing positive results. The mission of the task force is to focus law enforcement and community efforts to develop and implement multi-year strategies to eliminate youth violence crimes. The task force has seized 286 guns, conducted 62 search warrants to retrieve illegal firearms and made 626 arrests. Drive-by shootings fell from 168 in 1995 to 41 in 1998 and 13 as of July 1, 1999. The numbers of youth killed by firearms fell from 22 in 1996 to six in 1998 and two as of July 1, 1999.

Since the formation of the task force, additional employment opportunities for youth have been expanded as well as after-school programs and recreational programs. The Mayor announced at a June news conference that the task force, which is a cooperative effort between law enforcement, churches, youth service providers and community members, will continue.

Empower the Community

Race Based Profiling
The Portland Police Bureau along with the metro area Chiefs and Sheriffs, and the Superintendent of the State Police, joined together with their union and labor representatives to sign the Law Enforcement Non-discrimination Resolution in April. This resolution discussed the issue of race-based profiling during traffic stops.

The resolution took a strong stand against the practice of race-based profiling or any other type of discrimination within the scope of our daily contact with individuals in communities, or anyone driving or moving about roads, highways and neighborhoods. The resolution said the only valid police practices are those free of discrimination or suspicion engendered by race and that this expectation and right extends to all citizens of Oregon.

WomenStrength Turns 20
The Portland Police Bureau's WomenStrength Program celebrated its 20th year in 1999. Since July 1979, WomenStrength has provided free training in personal safety to the public, with a focus on sexual assault, domestic violence, and danger on the street.

WomenStrength educates the public in primarily two formats: nine-hour physical self-defense classes for women and teen girls, and one-and-a-half-hour non-physical personal safety workshops for women, men, and teens.

WomenStrength is the only free, ongoing city-sponsored, self-defense program in the United States. More than 18,000 women and girls have taken the self-defense class, and more than 67,000 women, men, and teens have attended a personal safety workshop.

Develop and Empower Personnel

Bureau Awards
The Bureau awarded the Medal of Valor, Commendations Medals, Distinguished Service Medals, Meritorious Service Medals for Valor, Distinguished Service Medals and Certificates of Appreciation in two awards ceremonies: July 1998 and January 1999.

Chief's Forum
The Chief's Forum awards ceremony in February honored community members and Bureau employees. The Chief's Forum gave awards in the following categories: the Community Policing Problem Solving Award, Certificate of Appreciation, and the Youth Recognition Certificate.

In addition, Cmdr. Larry Findling was honored with the Nathan Thomas Memorial Award, the Forum's highest award, for his work on the Hostage Negotiation Team.

Child Abuse Team Wins Award
The Child Abuse Team (CAT) was honored with a Spirit of Portland award in December. The group was given the award and cited for its "emotionally draining work, long hours, never-ending cases and team of professional, highly motivated workers."

The team has members from the Portland Police Bureau, Multnomah County Sheriff's Office, Oregon State Police and Gresham Police Department.

The team recently presented a workshop on Responding to Child Maltreatment, how to form a successful child abuse and domestic violence team at a San Diego, California conference that had more than 1,600 participants from 33 foreign countries.

Computer Training
The Police Bureau continued to teach Crime Analysis and Mapping Information Network (CAMIN), a system that allows Bureau members to search and place on a map recent dispatch data and/or police report information. CAMIN was the first tool that showed dispatch and police report information together in the same database. In addition, Bureau members also conducted crime analysis and PowerPoint training. Training is conducted in the computer training room in the Planning and Support Division.

Day Care Center
The Day Watch, the day care center located in the Justice Center, opened in March 1999, and is used by Bureau employees for permanent and part-time care. The day care center allows officers called in for special duty or court to use the facility for a small fee on short notice. An outside provider was chosen to run the day care on a day-to-day basis, and a committee of Police Bureau members oversees the center.

Firing Range/Firearms Training
The Police Bureau's indoor firing range in the Justice Center's basement reopened in spring 1999 after a $320,000 refurbishment. As part of the renovation, the range's air system was updated as well as the bullet trap, which is expected to reduce noise and lead contamination. The Training Division also purchased a firearms simulation machine (PRISim Firearms Simulator) that projects life-size videos on a screen so officers can practice encountering life-threatening situations. PRISim allows officers to move freely before a video simulation screen, firing with handguns, rifles or shotguns that are modified to shoot fake rounds. It also allows officers to practice reloading their firearms and handling weapon malfunctions under stressful situations. Under the prior simulation machine, officers were tethered to one spot and could only use a modified handgun.

Question, Persuade, Refer (QPR) Training
The Employee Assistance Program (EAP) became certified in QPR – a suicide prevention technique. This training was given to the RU managers and to all bureau employees, sworn and non-sworn, from January to May 1999.

Training Evaluation System
A new automatic trainee evaluations system (ADORE) replaced the system the Bureau has used since 1979. The new system requires daily reports by each Field Training Officer (FTO) to compile accurate and complete information. This precinct data is accessible to Training and RU managers from the network. The supervising sergeant, RU manager and training staff can access the information about any trainee at any time.

In addition, the training criteria has also been modified. There are now five phases of training instead of three, with exact criteria for each step. The system defines and records acceptable and unacceptable behavior each day, and provides both numerical scores and narratives.

Y2K Preparation
The Police Bureau formed a Y2K committee in January 1999 to study Bureau needs regarding the Y2K bug. Many priority one subsystems were completed by July 1999. These include such systems as: the basic entry and update systems in Records; vehicle entry/updates; the Court Coordinator subsystem; the PPDS/MDT inquiry processing subsystem; and the CAD Tactical Inquiry subsystem.

The committee also sent out information to Bureau employees regarding Y2K resources and what each employee could do to minimize risks.

Strengthen Planning, Evaluation and Fiscal Support

National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives (NOBLE) Conference
The Portland Police Bureau hosted the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives (NOBLE) Conference in July 1999.

The conference drew more than 1,800 people. Participants and the National NOBLE organization rated Portland's conference as the best ever.

Police Bureau's Vision
In fall 1999, a final report was issued by the Steering Committee for the Police Bureau's Institute for Law and Justice (ILJ) project. The Steering Committee's report was based on the ILJ's initial report, Future Plan: Taking Community Policing to the Next Level.

The ILJ consultants facilitated more than 35 focus groups listening to hundreds of individuals representing schools, neighborhoods, businesses, elected officials, representatives from the media, social services, city bureaus, criminal justice agencies, the faith community and Bureau membership.

Participants were asked their vision on what needs to be expanded/enhanced, added or partnered in order for the Bureau to become the agency we would want to become over the next decades. A report was issued in the spring. From that report, a Steering Committee was selected to focus on priorities and strategies to accomplish those priorities.

A final report was issued by the Steering Committee in fall 1999. Adopted strategies from this report will be included and adopted as part of the Police Bureau's 2000-2002 Strategic Plan.

Significant Events

Chief of Police
Portland Police Bureau Chief of Police Charles A. Moose, Ph.D. resigned in summer 1999 to become the Police Chief of Montgomery County, Maryland. Assistant Chief Lynnae C. Berg was chosen to be the Interim Chief.

In December 1999, Mayor Vera Katz announced Mark A. Kroeker was chosen as the new chief. He was sworn in on December 17, 1999.

Officers Shot
Officer Keith Jones was shot in the neck in June 1999 while responding to a family disturbance call. Other responding officers were able to remove the female victim and the children from the residence, and the suspect was arrested.

In a separate incident, Officer Sze Lai was shot twice in the arm in July 1999, responding to a call of a suicidal man. The incident resulted in a lengthy standoff with the man who later committed suicide.

Both officers are still recovering from their injuries.
