UNREINFORCED MASONRY (URM) DATABASE

The following database contains some information about buildings in the City of Portland which are believed to be of unreinforced masonry (URM) construction.

The City of Portland makes no representations, express or implied as to the accuracy of this database. There are no assurances as to whether the information presented is correct or comprehensive.

The URM database list is built upon the database that was compiled in the 1990's. The current list is based on validation of the original list and has been updated to reflect any demolitions and permitted seismic upgrades since the establishment of the original list. The validation of the existing data involved reviewing the existing list for accuracy using tools such as Google maps, review of City records and site visits. While every effort was made to confirm the information, accuracy of the database cannot be guaranteed. Some buildings may have more than one address or have an address different than what is shown in the database and not all permitted building records could be located. Some of the buildings may not be of URM construction. Some of the buildings may have been improved to better resist seismic loads. If this is known, it is indicated in the database.

The presence of a building in this data is not a predictor of its performance in a seismic event. Many factors contribute to building damage during earthquakes. Some, but not all, causes include: the size and location of the seismic event; local soils upon which the building is founded; the shape of the building; the design of the building; the construction quality; and if the building has been structurally modified.

The services of a licensed professional engineer are needed to determine the capacity of a building to resist seismic loads.

Any publication or distribution that is made of this information or any conclusions drawn from this information should be made with the limitations noted above in mind. Any publication or distribution of this information would be solely at your own risk.
