The URBAN DESIGN FRAMEWORK brings the urban design objectives to the ground and details how the city will achieve them. It locates centers and corridors—areas expected to grow and change—within the context of the City’s distinctive natural and topographic features. It is intended to help shape conversations about existing and future places, connections and experiences, and the public infrastructure investments needed to support them.