

WHAT'S HAPPENING NOW

As you will have noticed, the traffic changes are in place. With this change comes a new public safety issue along SW Sacajawea to be aware of. At the intersection of Sacajawea and Lewis Clark Way, a path directs pedestrians to cross Sacajawea and Sterns, then over Lewis Clark Way and onto the pedestrian path. Some pedestrians are choosing to continue down Sacajawea, into the pedestrian restricted area portion, running alongside of the construction zone. This has caused several unsafe situations because of restricted visibility, raising the heart rates of both drivers and pedestrians. When enjoying this area on foot, please remember to use the provided pedestrian path.

Changes to fencing and barricade placements has opened a couple of new vantage points into the project site. The most popular location seems to be from the sidewalk on SW Sacajawea, just above Lewis Clark Way. It offers a great view! Check it out on your next walk through the park.

Now is an excellent time to notice the two large inlet pipes that are part of the project (see attached photo). These large, 30-inch diameter pipes, will each connect to a cell of the new reservoir. They will convey potable water into the reservoir by passing through the TB2 wall, the seismic buffer material, and the concrete reservoir wall before dropping down to the floor of the reservoir. The best vantagepoint to view them is from SW Sherwood Blvd.
